

ABSTRACT

Interprocess buffer management is described. In an implementation, a method includes determining an amount of time to communicate a message and receive a response to the message by a first process from a second process. A buffer delay time is computed from the amount of time. Data from the first process is stored in a buffer. When the buffer delay time is reached, the buffer is sent to the second process.